Description of the Related Art When an image such as a photograph is read by a scanner or the like, the image is divided into a plurality of blocks each consisting of an N number of pixels. In each block, the density of each pixel is determined from a pixel value obtained by reading each pixel in the block. Since the density of the original document varies depending on the image density or a particular color thereof, a block of pixels may not be determined as a correct density for the original document. In such a case, the density of each pixel is determined by interpolating a pixel value of an adjacent pixel and a pixel value of an adjacent pixel. In interpolating the pixel value of each pixel, a determination is made as to which pixel is most suitable for determining the pixel value of a pixel
