The installer version of the application is available here.The human cost of the Iraq war The Iraq war has been called the central issue of our time. But like the Vietnam War, it is also an issue that is deeply troubling for the general public, as well as the media. The deaths of some 6,900 troops from 2003 to 2007 is very high. It is 25 percent of the American military that has been killed since the war began. That compares with less than 1 percent in the Vietnam War. Most Americans know someone killed in Iraq or Afghanistan or one of the many other places where our troops have served. When you put the numbers of troops killed on the page, the numbers are shocking. They are not the fact of the war, but the price of the war. The media and public alike have not grasped what they are dealing with. Instead, they have focused on some of the political aspects of the war, as if the war itself is not real and has no impact on the lives of the public. But those in charge at the Pentagon realize what the war is doing. And they are speaking out. In the most recent edition of the Army Times, the magazine of the Army, the public affairs officer of the Army G-4, an intelligence branch, General Peter Chiarelli, said in an interview: "The total number of troops killed and wounded in Iraq and Afghanistan in the past 14 years, including the war in Iraq, is 6,900. Now, in that 14 years, the Army has gone from pre-deployment to post-deployment, from land-warfare to expeditionary warfare. The numbers in these 14 years are massive. We are, by far, the most battle-tested Army of the world." He added: "I think we're getting the job done. I don't know if we're getting the job done right now. … We're still working on it, and there's a lot more to come." You hear that all over, and it is true. The loss of so many lives is a sobering part of the Iraq war, and it should be. But the size of the numbers, the total of 6,900, is shocking. It is more than the number of troops killed in Vietnam. And the numbers are still rising. So many families lost a child, and so many lives turned into damaged ones. This means that something deep has happened. It means the war has been an incredibly destructive force. Yet most Americans realize that the war in
