Pakistan and the United States have close ties that are backed by billions of dollars in military and economic aid. Pakistan has sought the sale of oil at a time when it is saddled with a foreign debt of $6 billion, largely the result of a debt servicing bill that has added to Islamabad's economic problems.

Analysts have said that the new transaction could provide support to Pakistan's government and help Islamabad to repay the country's short-term debt. The new deal would reduce Pakistan's dependence on oil imports.

The country has spent about $15 billion on imports in the past 10 years, including about $5 billion in 2017 alone. Imran Khan, Pakistan's prime minister, said in May that he had received a commitment from U.S. President Donald Trump to help fund the government's import requirements. The two countries had agreed in March to explore the feasibility of the deal. Pakistan hopes to sell the oil to a Western company that will bring the oil from the Middle East through
