When the program is run it shows its window and starts playing the sound you have selected. You can view the waveform on the right side of the window and the current looping position on the left side. The looping position is measured in seconds and the length of a loop is determined by the duration of the sound (or sound clip) you selected. The waveform is updated every time the position is changed. You can drag the slider to change the position. You can hold the mouse button and move the slider to quickly skip through time. When you release the button the slider is displayed again. You can drag the green line to the left to advance or to the right to rewind. You can select which plays the sound file by switching the green slider to the value you want. The slider will be highlighted green when it is set to the value you have pressed on. Dragging the slider will automatically select the value you are pressing. You can press the Stop button to stop and resume playback at the position you have set. Here is a demo of the application: Demo

Background OGG-sounds for the time being are saved to a sound file as an OGG-compressed part file and as a Vorbis-encoded part file. OGG-part files have several advantages when compared with other sound formats. They have practically unlimited size, they are compressed very effectively, they can be read easily and reliably and the decoding is very fast. Furthermore, they can be synchronized with a video. Ogg-sounds can be loaded from an Ogg-part file or from an Ogg-Vorbis-encoded file. The loading can be done by pressing Load and then selecting Open with... and then selecting OGG Looper and then selecting the part file. Ogg-sounds can also be loaded by drag-n-dropping the part file into the program window. The window is initially greyed out to warn you that there are no sound-files on your PC and that it may take some time before the sounds become available. Then the greyed out loading window is removed and you will be able to load the sound file. Note that OGG-Vorbis-encoded files are not supported. When Ogg-sounds are decoded by the application the sound is usually encoded with only a single channel. The looping point can be determined easily and accurately, but the waveform will be displayed only on the one
