A number of sterically more demanding anhydrosugar derivatives were obtained from cholesteryl glycosides by reductive cleavage of the corresponding per-O-benzylidene derivatives. The resulting glycosides were employed for the synthesis of oligosaccharides bearing a fatty acid moiety at C-3 of the aglycones.Q: Struts2 EIBs I need to write a struts2 app that takes a day of information from a table on a db, builds an XML based on all the information, and sends it to a webpage. As of now, I have struts2 working as a JSP, and I've even been able to write an EJB. My question is, how should I go about writing this EJB's action class, using the EJB framework? The first thing that comes to mind is to create an Object that contains all of the data from the db table, but I want to abstract that away from the action class, so that any new tables that are added to the db, can be automatically added. Does anyone have any advice on how I should do this? A: I'm not sure what you mean by "EJB framework", since there is no EJB framework for Struts2. There's just a J2EE API. It's a common pattern to create a repository abstracting the persistence layer and have a service that calls the repository to fetch objects. A well-known example is the jOOQ project, which implements a IPA framework that relies on Spring Data IPA and Hibernate ORM. It provides a test application for your domain model (EntityManager, Entity, etc.), so you can just use that. But you can also use it in other apps, which are just Spring MVC controllers. Struts2 makes heavy use of Spring M $\,$
