As in many countries in southeast Asia, a high incidence of gastric cancer, which is the second leading cancer cause of death, has been noted in Thailand. This project has two specific aims. First, we have developed a computerized system, which converts, synthesizes, and plots data obtained from 28 different types of human cancer, into a single graph illustrating the spatial distribution of the cancer incidence. The second aim of this project is to use this system to determine the geographic distributions of cancer rates in Thailand. We will use these results to determine the areas in which cancer prevention activities should be strengthened, to estimate the extent to which cancer prevention costs are covered, and to establish goals for the control of cancer in Thailand. Specifically, we will establish cancer rates for 1) all of Thailand and for each province, 2) those provinces that are categorized as being at high risk, 3) those provinces that are categorized as having a high cancer burden, and 4) those provinces that are b7e8fd5c8
