update I'm currently working on the preliminary data for the 2020 revision to my USDA Food Caper. Because there is a lot of data involved and a lot of change from prior versions (see this post for a summary), I thought I would issue an update regarding data collection and preliminary results for 2020. Just a note, first is no one can publish an industry (or caper) broad market target for the 2020 revision as this revision is being developed. Second, from preliminary data I've received so far, 2020 will most likely provide the largest possible increases in dairy volume and beef cattle numbers since the last revision in 2015. Therefore, most numbers are being revised up meaning if the revision is published it will look much better than my preliminary revision before this study was drafted. There will be a lot of updates provided throughout the next few weeks and as always, many thanks to those who have contributed to this study by providing data on dairy volume and beef cattle numbers. I try to present the best approximation as possible at this time but as some of my analyses continue I may miss some relationships or make some tweaks that I miss. Previous work The main thread that ran through the USDA Food Caper is milk price impacts via oversupply (e.g., California dairy production growing to record levels due to low milk prices). This analysis has been an iterative process. Over the past year it became apparent that additional factors were impacting dairy supply and demand and no longer just one factor was impacting the market. These factors included: Chinese production and demand (Krispy Kreme, Reuhled Cheese, Et al.) USDA supply and demand (Preventing Small Dairy From Closing) Fast expansion in dairy production as a result of low milk prices (Data shown in Figure 1 below) USDA's enhancement to their dairy supply and demand through price-ceiling adjustments Fueled by the existence of the price-ceiling, a lot of producers expanded their business beyond what would be considered small (e.g., those which I had previously connected with price ceiling affects due to low milk prices or milk surplus to requirements). The inability of USDA to figure out the Dairy Market with "one-size-fits-all" solutions (i.e., price-ceiling or "get big or get out" programs) simply perpetuates the cycle of shrinking dairy (for a long time) versus expanding dairy. Everyone knows that there
