from. Thirty years ago this week, a man appeared on Oprah Winfrey's talk show wearing a bathrobe and blanket and said he wanted to talk to the world. His name was Phil McGraw, and he had decided to talk about his children. His son was a respected surgeon, his daughter had been raped, his son had been in prison, and the son's girlfriend had been murdered. Advertisement He was crying when he stepped into the spotlight and poured out his heart. Or, as he put it, "The story of my life." And then he would invite the audience to join him in a discussion of how he reconciled his own life with the incomprehensible tragedy. The son of a biker gang member who had been in prison himself, Phil McGraw was straight-talking, tough, but never mean. His children and others could see the pain in his eyes and feel the sincerity in his willingness to help. And they could find the answers he couldn't, even after 30 years. And so, 30 years later, the story is still not over. In July of 1982, on the heels of a major push by his doctor to make him stop smoking, McGraw was coming home to find his wife, Susan, sitting at their kitchen table, weeping. "She wanted my advice," he says. "She wanted to know what to do. I was going to tell her not to marry
