granulomatosis in the horse: a critical appraisal of six cases. Six cases of pulmonary granulomatosis in horses are reported. Bronchoalveolar lavage specimens were stained for acid-fast bacilli and stained with Wright's stain for fungal organisms. Histopathologic and cytologic evaluations were made on the affected lung tissue. The horses ranged in age from 2 to 18 years;

four were female and two were male. Three horses had acute conditions at the time of presentation; two had chronic conditions and one had no clinical signs. Three of the horses were draft horses and three were Thoroughbreds. All horses had involvement of several lobes, and all horses had lesions in the distal trachea, bronchi, and bronchioles. Congestion and edema were present in all of the horses. Neutrophilic exudate and lymphoid cell aggregates were observed in the interstitium in all horses. Fungi were present in the affected area of three horses and mycobacteria were found in the affected area of one horse. Histologic findings in the horses varied from mild to severe and included bronchial epithelial changes, necrosis of bronchial and bronchioalveolar epithelium, degeneration and loss of alveolar epithelium, and accumulation of exudate and fibrin between and surrounding alveoli. A benign granulomatous-type lung disease was diagnosed in each case. Pulmonary granulomatosis of horses may appear as acute (mycobacterial) or chronic (mycobacterial or fungal) conditions. The condition typically affects the bronchi and bronchioles 6d1f23a050
