Reportedly the biggest change is the move to the new Adobe Bridge. People who use Lightroom for importing photos, organizing them and finding them share photos (and some people even work with images that are imported into Lightroom by third-party software). The new version of Bridge now replaces what many perceived was a "crappy" version of the feature set with a more elaborate offering, with a refresh of popular features including:

- the Import Shell, which allows the user to import images directly into the editing and editing workflow;
- smart collections, which organizes the images based on the tags assigned to them;
- keyword tagging, which allows the user to review images by their keywords and highlights in one place;
- large-scale image previews, which allows the user to see large previews of large images;
- libraries, which are external containers for organizing your images.

The Bridge also appears to have received more functions and improvements, such as:

- brush tools can be used in photos to correct minor defects or add effects;
- the ability to create and save adjustment layers, and apply these layers to images;
- Batch Export, which can help save time when processing a large number of images (though the regular Automate feature is also available);
- Equibox, a feature that allows images within Bridge to be grouped in boxes, categories, or albums;
- easy sharing;
- batch adjustments, which allows the user to adjust the color and brightness of a large number of images;
- ease of navigation and management;

- batch corrections and preference management;
- Color Tags, which allows directly creating colors and tinted adjustments from photographers. The user can also create new keywords too;
- less crowded and easier to navigate.

After you have created the basic layout of an image, you need to think about how to include text in the layout. Pixels fall into one of eight basic colors: `cyan`, `magenta`, `yellow`, `black`, `white`, `green`, `red`, and `blue`. Each of these colors is represented by a number. To make a color, you use the color picker to change the color's number (or RGB number) to what you want. (Note: the number does not change the perceived lightness or saturation.) If you want to use color names, use the Colors name system to get the right name for the color you want.

The Colors picker is located in the top left corner of the screen. Pick a color from that picker by dragging your mouse through the area. How do I make the font bigger?
Click on the font menu. You will find the font name on the left panel. Just hover over the font name and a tooltip for the font will appear. Click on the size you want the font to be in pixels. 100 pixels is the standard for GIF, PNG file formats, and Web. Start from 150 pixels if you want to arrive in a specific size. How can I save my work to the file system?
From the File menu, you will find an option for Save. When you open the Save window, check the write each time I save this file check box. The web can be an unpredictable environment and there could be a security issue. This is where the browser saving is great. You sign in with your Time Management username and password if you choose. 933d7f57e6
