San Jose, CA - We all know that technology is evolving in a seemingly unstoppable progression towards more and more powerful devices. The devices themselves are getting smaller, cheaper, and packed with more features, creating powerful and effective tools for working and learning. We are also beginning to understand that technology is having a major impact on the educational system. With technology at the forefront of our lives, many schools are being upgraded to meet the demands of adopting these new technologies into the learning process. While many of us have already begun falling into the trap of becoming addicted to the constant need to upgrade our mobile devices and to stay connected to the internet, there is no doubt that as technology continues to advance, we will need even more. Here are the key developments since 2017 in mobile learning . Education technologies have become a growing phenomenon throughout the last ten years. The LMS tools are being used less and less. It is not only due to the lack of innovation and the availability of similar looking and scalable tools that are simple to deploy, but also due to the ingrained beliefs that they disrupt the learning process. This is simply because an LMS is meant for online teaching and learning, and the learning process must be in a face-to-face setting.
